

List of Third Parties (other than PayPal Customers) with Whom Personal Information May be Shared

Effective as of 1 January 2024

 Download PDF

The previous “List of Third Parties (other than PayPal Customers) with Whom Personal Information May be Shared” is available here.

Why does PayPal provide this list?

PayPal’s banking license is issued in Luxembourg. This means that in addition to other European laws, PayPal must comply with Luxembourg Banking Laws, including banking secrecy.

PayPal publishes this list as required, to ensure that PayPal customers in the EU, EEA and Switzerland who are covered by the Luxembourg banking laws are informed as to which other companies (‘third parties’) may receive their data if they request PayPal services.

Why are so many companies listed?

PayPal has a significant number of customers in the EU, EEA and Switzerland that rely on PayPal to process their payments securely and safely. Providing these services efficiently sometimes requires PayPal to use the services provided by other Companies.

This list also includes companies used by other members of the PayPal Group, including Hyperwallet, Zettle and Xoom.

Note on outsourced services. Certain third parties and PayPal group companies provide services to PayPal (Europe) S.à r.l. et Cie, S.C.A. (PayPal) in order for PayPal to offer services to you. We may share data with these parties that could include account information such as your personal and/or business details and details of your transactions. These third parties are based in various locations in the European Union (including France, Germany, Ireland, Spain, Netherlands, Bulgaria, Italy, Poland, Cyprus, Sweden, Austria and the United Kingdom), Tunisia, Egypt, El Salvador, the Philippines and the United States. Pursuant to the Luxembourg law on the financial sector, we have amended this list to reflect the details required for such transfers.
